AC Bradley and his influence in twentieth-century Shakespeare criticism

Notes

AC Bradley's 1904 lectures on Shakespearean tragedy are deservedly regarded as classics of criticism. His analysis of Hamlet is deservedly famous, particularly his discussion of the famed problem of Hamlet's delay.

He classifies theories of the delay into several large categories. First are those that suggest that Hamlet delays mainly or primarily because of external circumstances - the risks of moving ahead with only the ghost's word for it, the need to bring the King to public justice and therefore the need to expose the king's guilt before the entire court, and so on. Bradley says that the theory is plausible until one reads the play. Contrary to this theory, Hamlet never describes any external obstacles to the execution of the ghost's instructions, assumes he has the means and the right to carry out those instructions, he never speaks of intending to bring Claudius to public justice.

A second sort of theory attributes Hamlet's delay to moral scruples. Bradley admits that Hamlet attributes the delay in part to conscience (5.2.63ff) but that this is neither nor the main reason cited for the delay. Further, Hamlet appears in the main to consider killing Claudius a moral duty. One might shift the ground a bit to suggest that Hamlet is unconsciously ambivalent about this duty: "in the depths of his nature, and unknown to himself, there was a moral repulsion to the deed." Bradley considers this a stronger position, but cannot accept it for a variety of reasons, among them the assumption that the ghost's instructions are

This is quite annoying - I don't want to change my reference manager but working with these delays is really hard.

He furthermore announced they were thinking about a way to store references in word documents using an alternative way which could eventually solve the slowness problem related to MS Word on Mac.. Any ideas on this? I would appreciate any help Some more information I gathered during the last days: The slow respond time affects the actual zotero beta releases and the standalone version as well as the current stable version.. When inserting it, it needs 10 minutes until the new reference appears in the document.. During the 1-2 minute delay, the word process takes all the cpu power, not the zotero process.. Installing a Zotero word processor plugin adds a Zotero toolbar to your word processor (in Word 2008 for Mac the script menu is used; in Word 2010, the Zotero toolbar is in the “Add-Ins” tab on the ribbon).

Still interrupts my workflow, but I can somehow live with it Furthermore, I recently did some 'round-trip-engineering' writing on the same Word document using Mac OS X as well als a Windows 7 system (consistency works like a charm due to zoteross syncing capabilities).. Using Windows, there is absolutely no delay between the command and the zotero citation window opening up.. Bjc 2110 driver for macbook I'm using Zotero Standalone alpha with Word 2008 for Mac (12. This obviously and unfortunately affects only Mac OS / MS Office for Mac Browsing the Zotero forum, I found another thread (where Zotero developer Simon said the issue is related to the Word API which on Mac OS is based on Apple Script and therefore obviously is slow.. I've arrived at a point where it has become almost unusable It takes a minute until the window pops up from where I can select a new citation.. After doing that, now zotero responds slightly faster Now it's about 10 to 20 seconds until the citation window pops up. Free Astronomy Software For Mac
